NEWSPAPERMEN STAND PAT IN FACE OF PARDON

(By Latest Mail)

NEW YORK—Whether or not newspaper reporters and editors can be forced to divulge the sources of their information by the federal government is to be tested in the United States courts.

The test case—which will be carried to the United States supreme court if necessary—has arisen through the publication in a morning paper in the Alexander-Helmeyer and the Littauer brothers' smuggling cases.

George Burdick, formerly city editor of the Tribune, and William I. Curtin, a Ship News reporter, are the ones who have stood pat on their right to protect sources of information to such an extent that they may be cited for contempt of court.

When the Alexander-Helmeyer case was published United States Attorney Snowden Marshall was much put out and started an investigation. There was no question as to the accuracy of the publication, but Mr. Marshall wanted to know where the "leak" was through, which the information could have been made public. Refused to Tell Grand Jury.

Burdick and Curtin were called before the federal grand jury and questioned. It was explained to them that the only object of the inquiry was to enable the federal authorities to ascertain who in the customs or other branches of the service had furnished the information. Burdick and Curtin gave excellent imitations of the Sphinx.

In order to coax the information out of them, however, the United States attorney had communicated with Washington and had obtained pardons in advance for the newspaper men, signed by President Wilson, which pardons would have protected them from all liability to punishment. They had refused on the constitutional ground that to answer questions by the grand jury might tend to incriminate or degrade them.

The pardons signed by the president overcame that point, but Burdick and Curtin, by advice of their counsel, former United States Attorney Henry A. Wise, continued to keep silent when an effort was made to get them to tell how the information was obtained.

Assistant District Attorney Frank R. Carstaphen told Judge Hand yesterday that the federal grand jury already had prepared informal presentments against Burdick and Curtin on the ground that they were not acting in good faith in asserting their constitutional right, but were, in fact, merely trying to shield some government official from whom the information had been obtained.

Prosecutor Cites Previous Case. Mr. Carstaphen pointed out that in a previous case, when Mr. Wise was the federal prosecutor, he had said that a pardon in advance, similar to those issued by the president in the present case, "had seemed to establish an interesting and important principle of constitutional law."

"Mabel, I'm drawn on the grand jury," "So am I, Gertrude." "Our responsibilities will be heavy." "I realize that. What shall we wear?"
